SCALLOPS are in fashion. Big scallops, little scallops, pointed or round scallops; deep or shallow, convex or concave; also cut-out curves and scrolls—they are used for cornices over windows in bedroom, bath, kitchen, dining room, dinette and living room. They are used also to frame or to partly frame cupboards of many different types ranging from gay kitchen cupboards to a dignified break-front for the living room. You can have all the scallops you want even in these times. They may be cut out of any thin wood or, if that is not available, composition board may be used. It is easy to cut simple scallop designs by hand with a coping saw.

NOTE: Mrs. Spears has made a pattern with 10 basic scallop and scroll designs with illustrated directions for combining them in many different ways for windows and cupboards of all sizes. Other suggestions for using scallops for home decoration are also included. Ask for pattern No. 207 and enclose 15 cents. Address:

Sheep in Near East Need
Cart to Carry Heavy Tail

Do you know that in the Near East there are sheep whose tails are so large and ponderous that the animals are provided with small four-wheeled carriages in order to relieve the weight of the tail and prevent it from coming into contact with the ground?

The oriental passion for greasy foods has led to the development of this type of sheep in which the fattest portion of the animal, the tail, combines excessive adiposity with enormous length.

Scanning the Beachhead of Europe

"Somewhere" on the channel coast, a British soldier standing at the breach of his gun, stares through his binoculars at the coast of France. There well-intrenched Germans braced themselves for the Allied assault they knew would come. What they didn't know was just when—and at what point. That information was in the hands of a few top-drawer Allied officers—who were rather discreet about it.

Navy Gridders Open Training Season

Putting enough steam into their work to weigh many an anchor, gridiron huskies of the U. S. naval academy at Annapolis, Md., smack into the bucking machine as they open spring training. An intrepid newsreel "photog" supplies incidental ballast for the machine as he makes a closeup of two plunging linesmen.

Enjoying Life

Capt. Dominic Salvatore Gentile, Piqua, Ohio, flier, who has 30 Nazi kills to his credit in air raids over Germany. The feat installs the handsome Mustang pilot in top-flight position among American fighting aces. For his outstanding work the flier has been awarded the Distinguished Service Cross by General Eisenhower.

Invasion by Cupid

Cupid shows up at Anzio beachhead in Italy to present a romantic interlude to the bitter fighting that has been waged there. The boy with the love darts looked in on the marriage of Lieut. Genevieve Clark, air corps nurse, and Lieut. Thomas R. Gale and saw them with their front line wedding cake.

PAUL WINS RECOGNITION FOR GENTILE CHRISTIANS

LESSON TEXT: Acts 15:23b-29; Galatians 2:1, 2, 9, 10, 20, 21.
GOLDEN TEXT: Being therefore justified by faith, we have peace with God through our Lord Jesus Christ.—Romans 5:1.

Problems and differences of opinion need not be harmful if they are properly met and honestly settled. In the church at Antioch a question had arisen which had to be answered, authoritatively, and once for all.

The early converts of the church were naturally from among the Jews, and they carried with them into their new-found faith the traditions of their religion. Some of them did not recognize that the salvation they had in Christ was entirely by grace apart from any works of the law. They not only felt that they must observe the law, but insisted that the Gentile believers must also fulfill the Jewish rite of circumcision. This promptly raised the question whether Christ alone could save, or if men were saved by grace plus works.

To settle this matter, Paul and Barnabas went up to the church at Jerusalem, and there a great council discussed it freely, and came to a decision which was then transmitted by letter and a committee. We find—

I. Fundamental Principle Established—Salvation by Grace (Acts 15:23b-29).

The believers at Antioch were to abstain from those things which would hinder their spiritual progress and harm their testimony. That was important and right, but it must not be allowed to confuse them regarding the basis of their salvation. They were not saved by works, no, not even by the most commendable. Salvation is by grace, through faith, not of works, lest any man should boast (Eph. 2:8, 9). That principle, which is absolutely foundational in all Christian thinking, was established then, and is valid and blessedly true for all time.

Is it not strange, then, that all through the church's history there has been a determined effort on the part of some in the church to add something to God's redeeming grace as a ground for salvation? One would think that all the peoples of the world would rejoice in such a gloriously simple and altogether divine redemption.

It is well worth our attention to observe how the matter was handled. Observe the plain rebuke given to the teachers of error in verse 24. It is no light matter to trouble and mislead the souls of men, by injecting our worldly wisdom or our opinions, when we should be teaching the truth of God's Word.

Note that there was fine courtesy in sending the message to the church at Antioch by messengers who were men of distinction and great spiritual courage. It was not a case of abruptly telling this new church what to do, and end it there, but of using this trying situation as a means of drawing the churches together in fellowship and mutual faith.

II. Sound Practice Observed—Walking by Faith (Gal. 2:1, 2, 9, 10, 20, 21).

The life of grace is not just something to be written or talked about, or to glory in, although it is all of these. It is to show forth in the daily walk of the Christian.

Paul in Galatians 2 tells of his experience in Jerusalem, of his meeting and discussion with the brethren. It was all of vital importance to him and to the cause of Christ, but it is not the record of an academic argument, or the vaunting of a personal victory which he presents.

He rises to the high point of Christian experience, the realization of the fact that a believer has died to self. He is crucified with Christ—and yet he lives.

Yes, he lives in a newness of life which is not his own, but Christ living in him. There is the secret of real Christian living—a complete acceptance of all that Christ is, in and for the believer.

This truth is at once deeply spiritual and completely practical. Again we say, it is not something about which one theorizes. It is an actuality—something which Christians can and do live out in daily experience. It is "the life which I now live" of which Paul speaks, and that is by "the faith of the Son of God," who loved us and gave Himself for us.

To fail to receive and appropriate this grace by seeking to be made righteous through the deeds of the law is to deny the need of the death of Christ, in fact, to make it a vain thing.

Some may feel that all this is too deeply theological for them, but it really is not, for God does not expect us to explain it, but only to accept it. This is His work, and it is indeed wonderful in our sight (Ps. 139:6), but not too wonderful to receive by faith, to rest and rejoice in, and to declare to others.

HOUSEHOLD
HINTS

Breads or rolls may be made to taste fresh by moistening them slightly and heating them in a moderately hot oven.

Fasten a small hook on the side of your kitchen cabinet and then when you have dishes or scrubbing to do, take the rings from your fingers and place them over this hook. In that way, you will not lose the rings from slipping off the fingers when they become wet and soaped.

Sprinkle a little talcum powder on ribbon knots that are hard to loosen and they will untie much easier.

If dish towels are rinsed thoroughly each day, they'll be sweeter, whiter and easier to launder.

Brooms get bowlegged if allowed to stand right side up. Hang up or stand upside down. Small screw-eyes on handles make hanging more convenient.

Don't "rip" sheets off the bed; carefully pull out the corners and make sure they're not caught on the springs. Reverse sheet so that wide hem is not always at the top. Pillow slips can't stand the strain when used as laundry bags.

How to Get Sugar for Canning

SUGAR FOR HOME CANNING

Housewives who are planning to can early fruits and vegetables and make their year's supply of jellies and jams, may now obtain their five pounds of sugar from their grocers for this purpose by using sugar stamp number 40 in War Ration Book Four.

This stamp will be valid through February 28, 1945. The estimated supply of sugar available for canning purposes will entitle housewives to a maximum of 25 pounds per person. This includes the 5 pounds secured with stamp number 40. To secure this extra quantity, application to local War Price & Rationing Board may be made under the following plan.

This year's application is made on a new and simplified form. A single application may be used for all members of a family living at the same address. The application must furnish the names of the persons for whom sugar is requested, and the name of the person making application, (usually the housewife); along with the estimated number of pounds (up to 20 pounds per person) needed for the canning of fruits and vegetables and for jams and jellies (in units of 5 pounds).

Since it is not necessary to show on the application the number of quarts to be canned it is anticipated that most families will apply for the maximum allowable. In such cases it will be up to the consumer to determine how to divide this sugar for both the "Spring" and "Fall" canning seasons.

The applications (Form R-323) are very simple since they only call for the name of the applicant, the names of persons for whom application is made and the number of pounds of sugar each is applying for.

Spare No. 37 Necessary

Spare stamp No. 37 from War Ration Book Four must be attached to the application, one stamp for each person listed on the application. In other words, an application for a family of four must have four No. 37 spare stamps attached. Since the applications are so simple it should not be necessary to fill out the form at home but can be filled out at the Ration Board Office on your specified day as shown on the following alphabetical schedule.

Applicants living outside of Joliet may obtain the applications at most grocery stores in their communities since the Board has sent a limited supply to them. Such applicants may mail their applications to the Board, but of necessity, applications presented in person will receive immediate attention.

Where and When to Apply

A special group will handle the rationing of canning in the basement of the Library building which has its entrance on the alley between the Public Service building and the Library building. In order to prevent a long waiting line the following schedule will be maintained for receiving your applications between 9:30 a. m. and 4:00 p. m.:

A thru E Monday, May 15th
F thru K Tuesday, May 16th
L thru O Wednesday, May 17th
P thru S Thursday, May 18th
T thru Z Friday, May 19th

Upon presentation of your application properly completed with spare stamps No. 37 from Book Four attached the applicant will immediately be handed the proper number of sugar certificates.

No Replacements

It is pointed out that the loss, damage or destruction of these certificates after issuance will not entitle the applicant to replacement. Under no circumstances can they be replaced.

In allotting this amount of sugar for home canning, in spite of the limited supply available for civilian use, the Office of Price Administration recognizes the importance of the production of home canned foods in this country's over-all wartime food program.

Home canning of fruits and vegetables added as estimated three and a half million jars of foods to the total supply of processed foods available for civilians in 1943, along with approximately 500,000 jars of preserves of all kinds.

This year, the need for producing large amounts of home canned foods is greater than ever. Commercial production will probably reach new heights, but military needs and lend-lease requirements will be high also.

To serve the most people to the best advantage housewives must help by using their allotted canning sugar to their best ability, and to their family's requirements of canning fruits, jellies and jams.

Wholesalers of sugar have been contacted by the local Ration Board to ascertain whether or not there would be sufficient supply of sugar available to fill the needs as represented by the certificates to be issued during this period. They point out that their will be an adequate supply altho some merchants may be temporarily out for a day or two during the anticipated rush.

Since the first of the year, our organization has sent out 28 birthday gifts to our boys which amount to $56.00. Easter cards were $11.42 and we gave $5.00 to the Red Cross a total of $72.42. If our organization is to continue in its work it will need the co-operation of all the people of our community. No contribution will be too large or too small. Mrs. Stokes Nebeker of Millbrea, Cal. and Mrs. Earl Ferguson, teacher in the Mokena school have each contributed a dollar a month for the past year. Other such contributions as these would be most welcome.

shows you how to get the most out of your present lighting

An advisory service to afford you greater benefit from your lamps and appliances.

Wash lamp bowls and clean bulbs with damp cloth frequently, to get from 25% to 30% more light from your lamps. Never place bulbs in water.

Lighten your shades. Dark shade linings are light robbers. A coat of white paint will turn parchment or metal lampshades into better reflectors; sometimes a damp cloth will clean such shades. Reline fabric shades with white or light material.

Avoid direct glare from lamp bulbs or bowls by using shades that are deep enough.

Make lamps do double duty. Two people can have plenty of good reading light from a single lamp, if the lamp is placed between them. Group your chairs around your lamps.

Use correct bulbs. Be sure to replace those burned out with correct size. Smaller or larger bulbs might not be as efficient. Check your needs at our Lamp Exchange counters.

Six suggestions for better light
... better sight

Sit close enough to the lamp to get all the help it can give your eyes. A difference of a few inches may mean 50% less light on your task.

There'll be a wide selection of lamps for your post-war home

Most lamp manufacturers nowadays are busy with war work. That's why there are few lamp styles to choose for your home.

With victory, these manufacturers will return to their peacetime pursuits, and there will be lamps galore. Once again, dealers' showrooms will be gay with lamps designed to suit every taste, meet every need, enhance any setting.

We look forward to this day of better light, better sight with the

THE OLD JUDGE SAYS...

"We can't argue with the Judge on that point, can we Mabel? It's not fair to penalize the many for the actions of the few."

"That, folks, is exactly what we would be doing in this country if we ever voted for prohibition again. Authorities who have made a careful study of the problem, report that only about 5% of those who drink abuse the privilege occasionally...95% drink sensibly. Probably doesn't compare with the number of folks who overeat and do other things to excess. Prohibition certainly isn't the answer. It's not that simple. We had nearly 14 years proof of that, didn't we?"

"The real answer is education and better control. In fact, the responsible members of the distilling industry are working constantly toward that end. They don't want anybody to abuse the use of their product any more than the three of us do."

"If everybody would take that sensible attitude, Judge, and cooperate as more and more are now doing, we'd be a lot better off a lot quicker."

Unknown Name On The Map

Except to its inhabitants and friends, many a town is to the rest of the world merely an unknown name on the map. Motorists who remember pre-war travel have forgotten places they once slowed down—a little—to pass heedlessly through.

Not every town can boast of famous sons, or of historic taverns or of extraordinary natural curiosities. Yet any town can distinguish itself by the simple device of widespread planting of some single flower or shrub. Put an althea (maybe you know it as the Rose of Sharon) on every lawn in a town and the place will grow steadily in favorable fame. Petunias or roses or hollyhocks, or whatever grows well will do as well.

The effect on passing strangers is worthwhile. Of deeper value is the stimulated pride of those who call the town home. A town, like an individual, needs something to feed its pride.

THE STORY THUS FAR: Lieut. Col. Frank Kurtz, pilot of a Flying Fortress, tells of that fatal day when the Japs struck in the Philippines. Eight of his men were killed fleeing for shelter and Old 99, with many other Fortresses, was demolished before it could get off the ground. After escaping to Australia, what is left of the squadron flies to Java where they go out on missions over the Philippines. The bombardier takes up the story and tells of a flying trip to Brazil, Egypt, Iraq, India and Java. A battle in the clouds in which swarms of Zeros attack an E model Fortress is described, and in which the Zeros come out second best. Seven Zeros are shot down.

CHAPTER XII

"We've already lost altitude waiting for the Major (we'd boxed him in so he could stay with us and the Zeros wouldn't tear him to pieces), and he seems to have developed engine trouble. We're down to 23,000 feet. And I'm the lead bombardier."

"But now the whole plan is again altered: I get it over the command radio. We're to lay them in chains across this target. So I set up the bomb sight again, put the cross hairs on that cruiser."

"It is a perfect run. I even have time to take my eye off the sight, and fire bursts at two more Zeros as they attack from the front. They start way out ahead, to the left and a little below us. Now, coming on in at me, they cross over and up, toward the center of my fuselage, their guns pounding, and then slip on back and dive straight down and away."

"I get one because he misuses. "Then I jam my eye back onto that bomb sight. Everything is riding pretty—the cross hairs right where I want them, the bombs about ready to be released."

"A second before the bombs leave my plane, I see that Jap cruiser starting to turn (he's figured our bomb-release line to the hair). He's turning toward us as I watch the bombs go down. By the time they arrived, the cruiser is three-fourths through a turn of 180 degrees. The first bombs are falling short—three of them. Now mine come—two direct hits on the cruiser, the other two going over. The plane back of me gets some direct hits. My left wing man's string is barely in front of the cruiser, my right wing man's string is barely behind it—the damned thing seems enveloped in bombs churning the water, and debris flying above the foam. Boy, that Japanese captain just turned the wrong way!"

"But now our formation swings and heads for home, Zeros still swarming around us, and we're still losing altitude to stay back to protect the Major, who seems able to use barely enough throttle to keep her in the air. After forty minutes the last Zero drops away; they're short of gas and aren't chase us any further."

"Presently, over the command radio:

"Robinson to Skiles. Go ahead."

"Skiles answering."

"Radio the base at Malang to have an ambulance ready. We have two badly wounded men aboard."

"We wonder who they are. One is probably the tail gunner, since we saw Robinson's plane taking so many tracers there. The other must be their radio operator, or else they could have sent their own dot-dash message back to base."

"Meantime our radio operator is telling Malang to have the ambulance out. Our plane is now leading the formation. Major Robinson's just behind us. We've drifted slowly down to 4,000 feet altitude, protecting Robinson. Then, all of a sudden, Robinson's plane swoops down beneath us about 1,000 feet, and the incline sends it scooting on out in front of us, heading a little toward the coast of Borneo. Is Robinson going to beach her? And now over the command radio:

"Skiles to Robinson. Is there anything wrong?" our pilot asks.

"But there is no answer. We watch. Now Major Robinson is making a gradual turn, as though to rejoin the formation. But halfway in the turn his plane starts nosing over, goes into a dive, goes faster—straight down at the sea. We watch, holding our breath. Just before he goes in, his tail elevator blows off. The poor guy must have had the stick clutched back into his stomach trying to pull out of that dive, and the terrible air pressure on those elevators ripped them off. There's a huge splash—flame—a spiral of black smoke, and a widening circle of yellows, reds, and black, which is burning gas and oil on that topaz-green water."

"The second after it hits I call Lieutenant Duphrane on the interphone."

"My God, Duke," I said, "did you see that?"

"Yes," he said. And then in a minute he said, "Thank God those Japs didn't see it."

"The formation circles above the dead Queen. We circle until the fire dies away, peering down at the widening disk of oil. But there is no sign of anything else on the surface."

"Until then it hadn't seemed like a battle—just a game. But now I feel like someone had kicked me in the guts. There were guys on there I'd drunk with. We'd sat around and lied to each other. I'd seen it happen, but I couldn't believe what

I saw—it seemed like a bad dream. "When we landed, all the crew assembled for the critique, each member dictating just what he had seen to the officer. That's when I was credited with three of the eight Zeros we knocked down. After the critique no one had much to say. We were all thinking about what we saw happen."

"They told us to go to the barracks and get some rest. But an hour later I found that the whole crew had, one by one, drifted back out to the plane—cleaning guns, improving gun positions, doing things we'd suggested back in the States but no one had ever got around to doing. Throwing away those small inadequate ammunition cans, and rigging the guns so you could set a whole box of ammunition in there, figuring ways of putting more guns in the nose—50-caliber ones that really pack a punch. And cussing hell out of the bottom turret. It has remote control—you look through a mirror and everything is backwards, and you have to know exactly where the plane is going before you can line the sights."

"We'd found out our machine-gun oil would freeze at high altitudes, and we were figuring how to clean and oil the guns so they would best operate up there. You couldn't tell the officers from the men (remember, we had no maintenance crews in Java; we did all the work ourselves), and my pilot had his coveralls on, installing an extra oxygen outlet in the tail. After seeing what had happened to Robinson's tail gunner, he figured if his tail gunner got wounded, another man in the crew could go back there and they would both stay on oxygen."

Boy, that Japanese captain just turned the wrong way.

"The E of course was a big advance over the D. But any new model will have little things wrong that you never find out until you take one up and fight it."

"All through Java we did it all ourselves—the officers right along with us, helping load bombs and checking valves. We flew in weather out there you wouldn't drive out to the airport in back here. But the Japs were flying it too; they'd come in strafing and we'd have to jerk our old mutts off the ground quick."

"Anyway," said Frank Kurtz, "we had stopped the Japanese there in Macassar Strait for a while. The little Dutch Navy helped, but mostly it was American air power. We'd sunk quite a gang of them, so the rest had to go home and lick their wounds, realizing they couldn't move in on Java until they had air control. This meant they would have to clean us out of our advance fields in Borneo and the Celebes. It wouldn't be hard, for the Dutch had no troops to speak of on these islands. Everything had had to be withdrawn to hold Java. But it took time for the Japs to take over our little advance bases at Samarinda and Kendari, and being new to war, we foolishly thought 'Time was on our side. We were thinking of those thousand planes. We hadn't learned that Time in war is a treacherous ally who favors anyone who will use him."

"But meantime Colonel Eubank had hauled me down to the ground for a while to do a different job. Too many wars were going on. The Japanese were running a pretty good one, but against them were the American Air Force, the Royal Dutch Air Force, the American, Dutch, and Australian navies, all of us running wars of our own."

"Finally it was agreed that every night they'd deliver to me in Surabaya a safe-hand message, giving the position of every American ship in those waters. We'd swap information about operations, so everyone would be pulling together. It was a liaison job, and since I have to deal with Navy men so heavy with rank and gold braid on their sleeves they looked like they'd had their arms up to the elbows in scrambled eggs, the Colonel gave me a set of captain's bars, so I could talk up to them. Presently I was dealing with everyone—the Dutch and the British, too."

"The Dutch, for instance, were begging for help in Sumatra. It's that long island which parallels Malaya, pointing down in the direction of Java. The Japs weren't in Singapore yet, but already they were swarming across the narrow seas from Malaya trying to grab the oil refineries at Palembang. So the Colonel sent the Forts."

"We got to Palembang the last week in January," said Sergeant Boone, the gunner. "The Dutch there were certainly swell to us. There is a huge refinery in the town, and they took us to a club sponsored by Standard Oil Company—a palace. All the club members would drop around to be sure the Air Corps had a place for the night. A Dutch officer took the rear gunner and myself to his quarters. He'd married an American girl, so he spoke good English. We had on only greasy coveralls, but he took us right into his quarters—all air-conditioned and mosquito-proofed. The native couple they had as cook and houseboy gave us the first home-cooked meal we'd tasted since the war."

"The Dutch officer was a fine-looking big blond guy. He brought out clean pajamas for us, and some of his uniforms we could wear for dinner. He was depressed. Early in January he had evacuated his wife and child to Java—for safety, although that seems queer to say now. He himself was staying behind, in command of native ground troops, to defend those refineries. He hadn't heard from his wife. You could see he was very much in love with her. Also that he didn't think much of the military setup they had in Sumatra, so he doubted that he would ever see her again."

"He'd been back on a visit to Holland just before the Germans came in. Since then he'd had only one letter from his mother—smuggled out. She had had a couple of German maids from over the border. They made good servants for the heavy work, but just before the surprise invasion they'd been called back to Germany. It was the same, she said, all over Holland. So no wonder, he said, that the Germans knew the name of every Dutch officer in Holland. The morning of the invasion, the Gestapo would knock at the door, and when the officer opened it, would shoot him down in cold blood. This was why, he explained, the Dutch Navy was so incapacitated for officers. He was very bitter. He was in wonderful physical condition—been leading native troops through the jungles. Said his wife was high up in the Java mountains and hoped she was safe. Next morning we left on a mission and never saw him again."

"We came up a little later," said the Bombardier, "and by the time we got there, the Japs were moving into the river's mouth, just below Palembang. The weather was overcast—a ceiling of 2,000, so we had to work down below that. None of us liked it, because a Fort is a hell of a big easy target so close to the ground—never built for that. As we came in, so close to the ground, our radio operator called Skiles on the interphone."

"Captain," he said, "oxygen doesn't agree with me, but I'm willing to begin chewing it any time now," and I broke in, "You can say that again."

"Captain Northcott was leading the mission—six planes we were, and when we sighted the target he called over the command radio, assigning our flight to a transport on the left."

"It was a monster, a huge Maru liner which I've seen as a luxury cruise boat tied up to the San Francisco docks. Suddenly she cut loose a hell of an antiaircraft barrage at us, all coming from this one transport—a regular Fourth of July at three o'clock in the afternoon. It was like looking down into a cone of fire, with this transport at the tip, and smoking red-hot rivets, they seemed like, whizzing up at us. They were rocking us around when suddenly we shuddered violently and almost went over on our back. An ack-ack shell had burst under one wing near the fuselage. Big pieces of it tore a huge hole just where the wing joins the fuselage, and one embedded itself just a few inches from Captain Skiles."

"We were already on our run, almost at the release line, and the jar had thrown out the bomb sight—it was completely inoperative. But I'd done some practice low-altitude bombing at Muroc back in the States, so I said the hell with it. I was good and mad at the shaking-up we'd got. 'All right, you . . . here they come!'"

I hollered, and dropped four in rapid succession. They landed in a cluster about twenty-five feet from the transport. The other four I released more slowly. We'd come down to 1,000 feet now, and that's low."

Charged Fence Wire Solves Problem

Single Barbed Strand Is Sufficient

An electric fence made of a single strand of wire is being suggested by Floyd W. Duffee, agricultural engineer at the Wisconsin college of agriculture, as one way for farmers to meet their present fencing needs.

Many farmers are unwilling to buy expensive new fencing which besides being costly due to wartime restrictions may be of inferior quality. Duffee reports that lots of fencing has been taken down on Wisconsin farms along state highways and replaced by a single strand of electrified barbed wire.

The Wisconsin engineer sees a large measure of economy in installing an electric fence for the cost is only a matter of a few cents a rod, or but a fraction of the cost of woven wire fencing. The electric fence, of course, contains only one strand, compared to three or four up to six wires in the old barbed-wire fence. In addition, the farmer would have to buy a controller, but Duffee indicates that one controller will control miles of fence.

Other engineers are also warning against the purchase at present of any more wire fencing than is necessary. It is thought that the zinc coating now used due to wartime restrictions is not enough to protect the wire from rusting for any length of time.

In citing results of tests in New York state of 840 samples of fencing material, including much woven wire and barbed wire, one engineer reported that the tests reminded observers that the life of galvanized coating depends largely on the thickness of the zinc coat. It was revealed that the zinc wears off at a regular rate, and that the thinner the coating, the sooner the steel wire is exposed.

Samples of galvanized wire now under test at Cornell university have weights of zinc coating varying from two-tenths of an ounce to two ounces per square foot of wire surface. Rust never attacks wire until nearly all the zinc coating has worn away.

Cranberry Picking

Cranberries grow close to the ground in low and often marshy fields. They are harvested with a sort of scoop, somewhat resembling a wheat cradle, which is swung with two hands. Below is a machine developed in Massachusetts. The fingers on the big cylinder pick off the berries, and drop them into a hopper.

Vicland Oats Yields Heavily, Matures Early

The Vicland variety of oats was developed by the plant breeders of the Wisconsin agricultural experiment station and the U. S. department of agriculture. It is a short, medium stiff-strawed yellow oat. One of its chief advantages is that it matures early, thus ripening before the hot, dry weather of July and early August. Because it matures early, it has a much higher weight per bushel. It also has a high degree of resistance to rust and smuts.

Since Vicland does not grow so tall as the mid-season or late varieties and since it matures earlier, it is a much better companion crop for new seedlings of grasses and legumes.

During this period when maximum feed production is so important, the use of superior varieties, such as Vicland oats, is an excellent farm practice.

New Treatment for 'Red' Water Is Developed

Experiment station representatives have found that rust in the water can be removed by running it through a tank containing graded limestone and gravel. It must be a special kind of limestone, however, they say. Materials needed include a tank, valves, pipes and fittings. These probably will cost about $50. If water is hard, but does not contain iron and carbon dioxide, this method is not applicable.

Moses Would Take Long Chance on His Prediction

An old Negro, Moses by name, had been a great weather predictor during his period of slavery and was fairly successful. After he was given his freedom he decided to make an almanac and got his old master to do the writing for him.

He began, of course, with January and made his weather predictions up to August 10, when he predicted a fall of snow.

At this his master said: "Moses, you darn fool, you know it won't snow in August."

Old Moses replied: "Yes, I know it ain't apt to snow in August, but just think, if it was to, what a great prophet I would be."

"I STOPPED DOSING MY CONSTIPATION A YEAR AGO!"

Says Happy KELLOGG'S ALL-BRAN User

If you are still dosing your constipation, don't fail to read this unsolicited letter!

"I'd been troubled with common constipation for years. Tried many kinds of medicines for it. Then, just about a year ago, I tried KELLOGG'S ALL-BRAN. I ate it regularly, without missing a day. It helped so much, I have not taken one dose of medicine for constipation since, nor have I confined myself to any diet!" Mr. S. P. Loebe, Charleston, Missouri.

Sounds like magic, doesn't it? But, scientists say, KELLOGG'S ALL-BRAN can really "get at" a common cause of constipation—lack of dietary "cellulose" elements—because it is one of Nature's most effective sources of these elements! They help the friendly colonic flora fluff up and prepare the colonic contents for easy elimination. KELLOGG'S ALL-BRAN is not a purgative! Doesn't "sweep you out"! It's a gentle-acting, "regulating" food!

If you have constipation of this kind, eat KELLOGG'S ALL-BRAN, or several KELLOGG'S ALL-BRAN muffins regularly. Drink plenty of water. See if you don't find real relief. Insist on genuine ALL-BRAN, made only by Kellogg's in Battle Creek.

"WOULDN'T it be better," writes F. B., "if all forms of spectator sport were abolished and we put in 100 per cent concentration on winning the war? Suppose the millions or hundreds of millions spent on sport were used to buy more war bonds and to help such war causes as the Red Cross? Suppose everyone used everything he had, beyond taxes and actual living expenses, for the sake of winning the war as quickly as possible. Don't you honestly think it would speed up victory by many months?"

Grantland Rice

This might work out if human nature was not human nature. Human nature just isn't geared that way.

If all competitive sport were abolished, if there were no baseball, football, racing, boxing, basketball, golf, tennis, etc., left to watch or to follow or to read about or talk about, I think there would be a big drop in national morale, so-called, both among civilians and those in service. And I doubt that any additional revenue would be diverted to war bonds or to any other war relief.

With so many extra or loose billions floating around, the great majority would find another method of spending money, apart from sport.

It is beyond all expectation to find 135,000,000 people willing to concentrate entirely on any one thing, unless, like Russia, their country was invaded. There are still too many selfish, or greedy, or thoughtless, or ignorant people in the general mass.

A Concrete Example

How close to 100 per cent can you come, for example, in getting even a college football team geared up for victory? You might make a guess around 90 per cent. You'd be wrong.

I put this query to Bob Neyland, now General Neyland of the Engineers. Bob Neyland's Tennessee teams were noted, not only on the winning side, but also for their morale.

"The closest I could reach," Neyland said, "was around 75 per cent. Having reached 75 per cent I then tried to shove the morale, all-you've-got idea up to 80 per cent. I always found there was a certain slump back to about 70 per cent. I tried every angle I knew to reach the 80 per cent mark, but I could never make it."

You might still recall the old saying about "All work and no play." A certain amount of relaxation is one of the requirements for human efficiency.

Up at West Point they put in something like 16 hours a day at the toughest sort of grind. Yet I know that officers and cadets need the relaxation they get from football and other sports, even those not on any major team. They need it badly.

An Important Problem

There are two major schools of thought concerning sport today:

1. On the one side we have a growing group that wants to destroy or has little interest in the competitive side. This includes the army's high command, backed up by numerous college presidents, fostered by high-school officials.

This group has already throttled or suppressed the competitive side in hundreds of colleges and many hundreds of high schools. They have been classified as the "dumb-bell-swinging" or the calisthenic group. They don't believe in competitive training games.

2. On the other side we have a group, headed by the navy, and rather secretly supported by 95 per cent of the army, plus all the keener and more understanding college and high-school groups, that knows the value of competition, apart from mere mechanical exercises.

It is this latter group that is keeping competitive sport on the living side of the street today. The high-school situation, especially in New York, is extremely sour. It is probably at its best in Texas and Ohio.

It is now a question as to whether or not the people of the United States want all such sports as football, baseball, basketball, boxing, track and field abolished in favor of mass calisthenics, such as Germany used up to the Olympic Games of 1936.

It is a far more serious problem than the country at large understands just at this spot. But it is something that the real lovers of sport and our sporting tradition should begin to think about, before it is too late.

Unimportant Season

Before the start of the last football season we offered the suggestion that the football campaign of 1943 would be highly interesting—but completely unimportant so far as any national ranking was concerned.

We had such things as Bill Daley of Minnesota, playing with Michigan against Minnesota. Notre Dame had outside stars from Illinois, Minnesota and Miami University (meaning tackle White). The entire program was a mess of scrambled eggs.

HOW many fight followers remember the only time in the history of the heavyweight division that a man won the title while his opponent was sitting down?

To end this horrible mystery in a hurry, it was July 4, 1919, when Jack Dempsey met Jess Willard in Toledo, Ohio, for the world championship.

Challenger Jack—now Lieutenant Commander Dempsey of the Coast Guard—was in the best shape of his career. And he was exceedingly fortunate because that particular Independence Day happened to be one of the hottest days in the meteorological history of Toledo. Both fighters were literally bathed in perspiration as they climbed into the ring.

Dempsey was considerably shorter than Willard and had given him a 65-pound weight advantage. Jack's excellent physical condition wasn't accidental. He had long set his sights on the heavyweight title and was willing to work hard for it. And Willard was far from his best. In fact, he verged on softness.

Jack Dempsey

The First Round

Ollie Pecord was the referee. He called the two men to the center of the ring for their last-minute instructions. Then came the opening bell and the brawl was under way. Dempsey circled around for a few seconds, then uncorked a vicious right that plowed into Willard's midsection. Willard staggered and Jack followed with a left high on Willard's cheek.

Dempsey didn't overlook his current opportunity. He moved in like a wildcat. He let loose a long, hard right into Jess' stomach and Jess quivered like an aspen. Then came the most telling blow of the fight. Dempsey let loose with a left to the face that threatened to separate Willard's head from his shoulders. He went to the canvas, a surprised, sickly grin on his face.

Pecord shoved Dempsey to one side and started to count over the prostrate champion. Jess managed to lurch to his feet when the count went up to six, but he was already a beaten man. Again Dempsey moved in for the kill. A left to the head, followed by a right to the body, put Jess on the canvas for the second time. Jack waited for him to get up, which he did at the count of eight. Dempsey belted him all over the ring, the champ going down again for the count of seven. All in all, Willard went down seven times in the first round. The last knock-down came just before the bell ended the round. Referee Pecord was counting when the bell rang—and that's what caused the mixup.

The crowd was yelling so hard that the referee didn't hear the bell and kept on counting. He finished the ten count, crossed the ring and held up Dempsey's right hand in the customary salute of battle.

Jack Kearns, Dempsey's manager, hurried Jack out of the ring into his dressing room while Willard's handlers were helping him to his corner. Just before Jack got to his dressing room the officials were sending a messenger after him to come back to finish the fight.

Hope for Willard

The one-minute rest had worked miracles for Willard. But the journey towards the dressing room hadn't helped Jack's wind.

Jack coasted for the first minute of round two. The tables were turned a bit when Willard blasted through with a hard right to the chin that caught the challenger unprepared. Dempsey grabbed and held and didn't get up a full head of steam for the remainder of the round. But that first round had been hard on Willard.

By the third round Dempsey was more rested and had recovered. He didn't manage to get in a sledgehammer wallop, but he was giving Willard a terrific beating.

Willard was groggy at the end of the third round. He looked like a beaten man. Just about 20 seconds before the start of the fourth, Jess held a fast consultation with his manager and trainer. At the end of their rapid-fire chat, Willard's manager reached over and grabbed a white towel. Even as the bell rang for the fourth, the towel sailed over to the referee's feet and the fight was over.

Washington, D. C.

BITTER DEFERMENT FIGHT
The backstage fight over who is to direct the deferment of essential war workers is approaching white heat. It is being waged between certain of the biggest war chiefs in Washington, having developed into a row between the army-navy, WPB boss Donald Nelson, his vice chairman Charley Wilson, and Paul McNutt.

Only the White House will be able to straighten out the tangle.

Trouble began when Undersecretary of War Patterson and the army proposed that the question of industrial draft deferments be placed in the hands of the Production Executive committee of which WPB Vice Chairman Charley Wilson is chief. The army-navy, which started out by trying to cut Wilson's throat, now loves him, but continues to hate Donald Nelson. So their recommendation of Wilson to handle draft deferments was a slap at Nelson.

Nelson immediately slapped back. He and War Manpower Commissioner Paul McNutt went to the White House and told the President that industrial deferments were the job of the War Manpower commissioner. In fact, McNutt hinted that, if the President didn't consider the War Manpower commission competent to handle the question, he could get another Manpower Commissioner.

Donald Nelson backed him up. Since this meant taking the deferment job away from Nelson's own War Production board, it was a direct slap at Charley Wilson. Nelson even went further and indicated that Wilson and the Production Executive committee were controlled by the army.

More Civilian Goods?
This row over essential war-worker deferments also has brought to light another important inside debate over reconversion for civilian production. Chief battlers in this row are Nelson and Wilson, with the army-navy rooting for Wilson.

Wilson would like to begin production of 200,000 automobiles soon, but Nelson flatly opposes. Aside from autos, however, Wilson does not favor getting back into too much civilian production any time soon. To study the problem, he appointed a committee to formulate a policy on reconversion—which brought no enthusiasm at all from his nominal boss, D. Nelson, who disbanded the committee.

Nelson's cancellation, in turn, roused the ire of General Lucius Clay, General Somervell's chief production man, and Clay is now threatening to appoint an army-navy committee to study reconversion and make Wilson its head.

Behind this Nelson-Wilson row over reconversion is the basic conflict between big business and little business. Big business doesn't want any reconversion until it is finished with its war orders and, at present, it is chock-a-block with war orders. On the other hand, little business, which didn't get so many war orders, would like to begin right now making alarm clocks, electric irons, bicycles and a lot of small stuff which the public needs. Big business, however, doesn't want little business to get a head start.

In this row, Nelson sides with little business. His friends also claim that Wilson favors the big business viewpoint and wants to wait until the war is over, so everybody can line up at the starter's tape and get an equal start. The army sides with Wilson and big business for fear the second front may take more production than we realize.

Those are the issues. Meanwhile, some insiders, especially the army, are out again to get Nelson's scalp.

ARMY FURLOUGHS

Young Congressman Henry ("Scoop") Jackson of Washington has just been mustered out of the army to go back to congress. One of his first acts after getting into civilian clothes was to call on Lieutenant General McNair, head of army ground forces, and effect a major change in handling men about to go overseas.

He told McNair that one big gripe of the boys was that they often got no chance to visit their homes before being shipped abroad. All men were given seven-day furloughs regardless of where they lived—even if their homes were on the West Coast and they were in camp on the East Coast.

So the army has now agreed to the following:

1. No man will be sent overseas without getting a ten-day furlough.
2. This furlough provides that he will actually get ten days at home, plus time to travel from his base and back.

SNAPPY FACTS ABOUT RUBBER

Navigation is impossible even for a canoe on some of the tiny branches in the Amazon headwaters in the remote Bolivia rubber country. Air transport is now serving in the rubber development in these areas. Tappers cut their way through the jungle, with from 100 to 150 wild rubber trees serving as each tapper's route.

Tire experts hold that greater mileages are returned from truck tires if, when they are new, they are "broken in" for several thousand miles under normal or sub-normal conditions. Using new tires on front wheels before shifting them to the rear is one way of "seasoning" tires.

THE LOW DOWN from HICKORY GROVE

You know, it is hard for me to get myself worked up and feeling sorry for the way our grandpa and grandma used to live. As we look back she seems to me like they must have been just as happy, or even more so, than we are now.

For one thing grandpa and grandma didn't have any wrong numbers on the telephone to wake them up at 3 a.m., radio and crooners were unknown. Grandpa had no income tax blanks to perplex him. Also, he got along without the AAA, the SEC, the TVA and 3 million folks on the Govt. payroll.

In the old days, grandma had a dozen hams hanging in the store-room and grandpa had a couple barrels of applejack in the cellar. They didn't know anything about brown and green coupons. No Govt. bureau had told them they were downtrodden or underprivileged and should be pampered, so they went ahead and were contented and happy.

Grandpa and grandma lived on the fat of the land.

Yours with the low down,

JO SERRA
